Kafka's Ethics of Interpretation refutes the oft-repeated claim, made by Kafka's greatest interpreters, including Walter Benjamin and Harold Bloom, that Kafka sought to evade interpretation of his writings. Jennifer L. Geddes shows that this claim about Kafka's deliberate uninterpretability is not only wrong, it also misconstrues a central concern of his work.

This proverbial delimitation of human effort might serve to paraphrase the enjoinderment of Jennifer Geddes’s new monograph, Kafka’s Ethics of Interpretation. Geddes’s point of departure consists in the observation that much of Kafka criticism has succumbed to two hermeneutic temptations: either to pretend to have discovered the “real” meaning of the author’s enigmatic work—usually through the utilization of a particular theoretical lens—or to declare his corpus uninterpretable ...

The Trial by Franz Kafka can be described as existentialist novel, because even if Sartre and Camus would not have written The Trial, most of the themes developed by the existentialist philosophies are represented: the absurdity of the world, the contingency of existence, the nightmare of intersubjectivity, the political oppression, ...

Kafka: The Trial (Analysis)
While the gist of the code of ethics is similar across the board, many interpreting-specific organizations have come up with their own code of ethics by which members must abide. For the most part, every professional is beholden to a “boilerplate” set of ethics. A Code of Ethics helps protect both the client and the interpreter.

The man traveled to the Law presumably to learn the Law, or in my interpretation, the meaning of life. However, the man does nothing but sit and wait. The Law represents the futile quest for the meaning of life, as even if the man from the country were to get past the first doorkeeper, “there is one doorkeeper after another, each more ...

Abstract. This chapter demonstrates that Kafka’s novel, The Trial (1925), principally dramatises the climactic claim made by Nietzsche in his On the Genealogy of Morality (1887): man ‘does not deny suffering as such: he wills it, he even seeks it out, provided he is shown a meaning for it’. Arguing that the indeterminacy surrounding the reason for the protagonist’s arrest by the ...
